We're Sandy and Tom Farley, and it's our eleventh year of turning the empty weed-filled lot next to our home into a small-scale urban farm, Himmelgarten. Our goal is to provide the freshest produce we can to our subscribers. Farming has risks [drought, pests], which subscribers share. The benefits are nearly organic food, seasonal consumption, and neighborhood connection. You can subscribe and eat very locally at least some of the year.

How a CSA works:

Here's how our Community Supported Agriculture [CSA] works. Subscribers pay ahead for three to nine months of produce. Bags are ready on Tuesday afternoons/evenings. If you are busy or away, you can send a neighbor or donate your share to Ecumenical Hunger Program in East Palo Alto.

We offer 3 options: a one-person bag, the regular "couple" bag, and a family size. Occasional bags, if available, are $25 to $35 each. Call on Sunday or Monday to reserve.

What you will receive:

We send you an e-mail notice each Tuesday when your bag is ready.

We use [and reuse] handled paper grocery bags. There will be fruit, vegetables, herbs, and a flower based on what is ripe and at the peak of flavor. There may be seeds, honey, or preserves. Some weeks we have a bit more or less because of weather cycles and planting schedules, but we plan to give you good value for your investment over the course of each 12-week season.

Members may tour the garden at any time to see what's growing. Children are welcome.

What you can give:

You may contribute materials or excess produce from your garden to share. For example: we're not growing kiwis or figs. You may have extras from your yard. Your contribution will aid the Ecumenical Hunger Program as well as Himmelgarten. We welcome weeders any week!

Community Commitment:

We donate at least one bag a week to Ecumenical Hunger Program to feed people locally.

We plan occasional events for subscribers and neighbors to get to know each other.

Student work-experience positions can be arranged.

Year round, you are welcome to take or leave books at the Little Free Library on Rutherford Ave.
